Using the latest communications technologies and political techniques, as an array of high-level political consultants. PR tactics routinely "salvage" issues for government and corporate clients and "package" them for public consumption. The result is a "democracy" in which citizens are turned into passive receptacles of "disinformation" and "misinformation". Terms like "terrorist" and "extremist" are defined as ignorant meddlers and/or dangerous outsiders. Clients include: The Nigerian government during the Biafran war, to discredit reports of genocide; the fascist junta that ruled Argentina during the 70's and early 80's, to attract foreign investment; and Indonesia's Suharto regime, to shore up power through a CIA-sponsored bloodbath (it should be pointed out, however, that B-M denies that it is handling the issue of genocide in East Timor). B-M also represented the late communist Romanian despot Nicolae Ceausescu. B-M's environmental services have benefited industrial polluters such as Mitsubishi Chemical Co., which built a hazardous waste plant in Three Mile Island had its famous mishap in 1979. Union Carbide, to handle the public relations crisis caused by the Bhopal tragedy in 1984; Exxon, to counter the negative press coverage it got in the wake of the Exxon-Valdez oil spill in 1989. B-M was hired by the pharmaceutical company Monsanto to "communicate benefits" and counter opposition to use of the genetically-engineered synthetic bovine growth hormone rBGH. B-M's campaign to neutralize the opposition to rBGH included the use of spies to penetrate activist groups. (source: Carmelo Ruiz)

Khalid bin Mahfouz

Former BCCI executive and Carlyle Group investor Khalid bin Mahfouz is the banker for the Saudi royal family, and was linked to both Osama bin Laden and bin Laden families. A business association with Texas investment banker and CIA-connected James Bath ties George W. Bush directly to Osama bin Laden and family.
Mahfouz was the principal shareholder in BCCI ("bank of Criminals and Cocaine International") when it carried out the biggest fraud in financial history. BCCI had been set up as a criminal business. Mahfouz owned the National Commercial bank, the world's largest private bank, from which money went missing. Sami Ibarama helps represent the Mahfouz family interests. He is known in the Channel Islands intelligence sources (according to Kevin Dowling in an article in www.onlinejournal.com) state that Mahfouz's man Ibarama has been a member of one of the Carlyle Group's advisory boards.

"JUST WHAT THEY NEED - A £28 MILLION AIR DEFENCE SYSTEM."
Tony Blair has given the go-ahead for our government to sell a MILITARY air traffic control system to Tanzania.
The deal is being financed by a £40 million LOAN FROM BARCLAYS. The International Civil Aviation Authority, in a report to the World Bank, said the military air traffic control system was 4 times too expensive and was not adequate to improve the safety of civilian aircraft.
